

Jim Meek, columnist and media relations consultant, chairs session three: The Border and its impact on Atlantic Canadian Society

The North Magazine of Halifax's Citadel National Historic Site provided a fitting historical and societal context for discussion's on Canada-US relations.

The day long session saw many enthusiastic exchanges of thoughts and ideas – here Wayne Crawley from Emera and Jeff Somerville of Premier Executive Suites explore a point of common interest.

The modern conference facilities inside the renovated North Magazine were put to good use by the gathering of some of this region's opinion leaders from business and academia on both sides of the border.

Former Federal Minister John Crosbie talks to the media after his presentation on: The Border and its Impact on the Atlantic Economy.

Former President of UCCB Jacke Scott delivers her talk

Canadians and Americans came to Halifax to discuss the border and its implications for the Atlantic region. Here Tim Woodcock, former Mayor of Bangor speaks with John Young, Wayne Crawley and Jeff Somerville while Michael MacDonald, Reg Stuart and Denis Stairs review one of the presentations in the background.

AIMS Senior Fellow Michael; MacDonald delivered a lunch time address describing AIMS' Atlantica initiative in the context of the broader borderlines discussion

Former Nova Scotia Premier Donald Cameron was just one of the well informed and active participants at the event.

Participant discussions during the sessions flowed over into lunch and breaks as the concepts brought forward opened up avenues for dialogue and exploration

Denis Stairs (Dalhousie University, Halifax) listens as Gordon Weil (Chairman of the Weil Consulting Group and President of Standard Energy Company, Augusta, Maine) responds to a question from one of the participants after Weil's talk on Canada's Role in the North American Electricity Market.